Not only have Willingham & Côté's appellate attorneys represented the individual interests of parties, they have been asked to represent the interests of entire industries by authoring amicus briefs. Amicus briefs are often submitted when a case has broad implications beyond the rights of the parties directly involved in the case. These briefs inform the appellate courts of the wide-ranging effect a decision may have on a particular industry or on the public in general. Being asked to draft such briefs is recognition of the skilled demonstrated by Willingham & Côté's appellate attorneys. The following is a representative sample of cases in which Willingham & Côté has been requested to provide amicus support:
